

Bleeding Heart

Healing Heartbreak

How Bleeding Heart Helps

The function of Bleeding Heart is obvious by its name, shape, colour and the way it grows. The heart-shaped flowers hang together, which is what the word 'co-dependent' originally means – hanging together. So this is a great remedy for all of us prone to possessiveness, over-attachment and co-dependence or anyone suffering deep grief. As you might imagine from the picture, it's also the 'Heartbreak Essence' - a wonderful balm when our heart is wounded from the death of someone dear or the break up of a relationship.

It's also for those of us whose hearts are too scarred to love freely because it wasn't allowed to 'bleed' when it needed to, whether in this lifetime or in a past life. Maybe when we were wounded in the past it wasn't safe, it wasn't allowed, it wasn't considered 'appropriate' or was seen as weak, maybe it was even seen as a betrayal. The reason isn't important - as we take the essence the heartache eases, the old sorrow releases and we're able to open fully to receive love again.

I'm OK - You're not OK

Bleeding Heart is useful in situations where we feel trapped and helpless, where we feel that if only our partner/friend/boss/colleague would change, then it would all be OK. The truth is we're trapped in old emotional patterns and Bleeding Heart helps us step back objectively from those intense past feelings so that we can see that the ONLY person who can change the way they act and react is us.

It also helps us connect to musical talents and the power of sound healing – if you open each flower there are tiny structures similar to musical instruments - take the essence whilst listening to music that makes you feel soothed and peaceful for an additional boost.

Useful Affirmation: 'I honour my grief. When the time is right for me I release it and move on.'
